Preface

Astrology has often been viewed as a tool for predicting external events, as if the stars exerted an influence on our lives, guiding our destiny according to mechanisms beyond our control. The approach proposed in this book differs profoundly from this.

Here, the planets are not regarded as causes, but as reference points, symbols, reflections. Celestial configurations do not produce what we experience: they are its translation, its correspondence, its synchronicity. They express, in the language of the heavens, the movements of our own psyche.

From this perspective, planetary transits are not external forces imposed upon us, but valuable indications of how our inner structure manifests itself at a given moment. They reveal moods, dynamics, tensions or harmonies that emerge in our present experience.

This second volume is devoted to harmonious transits, that is, to the aspects of ease between transiting planets and those in the natal chart. These configurations reflect a smooth coexistence between the forces at play. They open up spaces of fluidity, ease and natural expression, where the various tendencies of the psyche align more spontaneously.

These periods can be experienced as moments of respite, coherence or inner harmony. Yet they are not, for that reason, states to be experienced passively. The ease they offer can sometimes be accompanied by a lack of attention or a tendency to function automatically. Thus, even in harmony, vigilance remains essential to fully experience what is unfolding.

The first volume, devoted to dissonant transits, highlighted inner tensions and contradictions as invitations to lucidity and integration. This second volume is a natural extension of that: it explores the moments when this integration becomes more fluid, when psychological forces find common ground, allowing for a freer and more unified expression.

Thus, this book proposes reading transits as fields of consciousness in motion, rather than as mechanisms of causality. What is at stake is not what is going to happen, but the way in which the various forces that make up our psyche unfold, here and now.

In this approach, nothing needs correcting, nothing needs transforming in the sense of an ideal to be attained. The psyche is what it is, in perfect harmony with the birth chart. Suffering does not stem from the configurations themselves, but from the way they are experienced through the prism of separation, when we identify with one part of ourselves whilst rejecting another.
Transits then become invitations to pay attention, to observe, to welcome what manifests, without judgement or a desire to control. They indicate moments when certain inner dynamics need to be seen, acknowledged and consciously worked through.

Thus, this book does not seek to predict, but to shed light. It does not propose to control events, but to engage with what is being experienced. It invites a form of inner listening where each harmony becomes a space of presence, an opportunity to experience more consciously the harmony of the forces within us.

Reading the transits in this way is to give oneself the opportunity no longer to be at the mercy of the psyche's movements, but to accompany them with clarity. It is to recognise that what unfolds within us is not a problem to be solved, but a reality to be seen.

And perhaps, in this simple and direct attention, to discover that behind the fluctuations of experience, there remains an unmoving, silent presence, always available — that which we are, beyond the forms our psyche takes.

Introduction

Our psyche is a reflection of our birth chart. This original psyche, which emerges at the moment of our birth, remains unchanged throughout our lives. But there are periods when this psyche, whilst retaining its basic structure, manifests itself differently. These psychological moods or variations correlate with the planets present in the sky at those times. These planets overlap with our birth chart: this is referred to as planetary transits.

Whilst we experience the influences signified by the houses occupied by the planets in the sky at our birth, those signified by the houses occupied by the planets in the current sky are added, for a given period. It is therefore necessary to take into account the interactions, or aspects, between the planets in the natal chart and those in transit.

In this book, these interactions are studied by taking into account the position of the planets in the natal chart within the signs. Indeed, each planet represents a force, and the sign in which it is located indicates the nature of the energy that fuels that force.

The aspects between transiting planets and natal planets fall into two main categories: aspects of tension and aspects of release.

The first volume was devoted to aspects of tension, that is, to dissonant transits. It highlighted internal contradictions, conflicting forces, and the need to recognise and integrate them in order to ease the tensions they generate.

This second volume is devoted to aspects of relaxation, that is to say, harmonious planetary transits. These aspects reflect an ease of coexistence between the forces at play. They align more spontaneously, allowing for a fluid, natural and harmonious expression of the various tendencies of the psyche.

These periods can be experienced as moments of inner coherence, where what lies within us finds its place and mode of expression more easily. Actions, feelings and thoughts seem to align with greater simplicity, giving a sense of continuity or obviousness in what is being experienced.

However, this ease does not mean we can let our guard down. It can sometimes be accompanied by a lack of attention or a tendency to operate on autopilot, as if the harmony itself were to become invisible simply because it is so natural. Here again, attention is essential to fully experience this fluidity, without becoming complacent.

Transits are temporal fields of force. The events we encounter act as barometers, indicating whether we are in harmony with our fields of force, both original and current. They show us when to direct our attention more precisely so as to be fully present to what is emerging with side us. By proceeding in this way, we prevent our experience from being obscured by distracting thoughts.

Transits thus enable us to anticipate and interpret the succession of present moments. They are a valuable aid to understanding, in the very moment, the movements of our psyche, inviting us to be consciously present to what is unfolding within us.

Harmonious transits to your Mercury

If transiting Pluto is in harmony with your Mercury:

You possess a remarkable ability to delve deeply into your thoughts and get to the heart of the subjects you explore. Your mind is penetrating and lucid, capable of perceiving what lies beneath the surface of things. You are not satisfied with superficial answers: you love to investigate, analyse, decode and reveal what is hidden. This connection also fosters a powerful way with words, capable of transforming, convincing, and even profoundly influencing others with accuracy and intensity. You know how to wield words as instruments of truth, and your discernment makes you particularly adept at thwarting manipulation or illusions.

If transiting Neptune is in harmony with your Mercury:

Your mind is naturally open to intuition, inspiration and a subtle form of understanding that goes beyond ordinary logic. You perceive ideas, emotions or situations with a keen sensitivity—sometimes even telepathic—that allows you to pick up on what others do not say. Your thinking is often poetic, vivid and imaginative, and you may excel in fields where creativity, symbolism or the spiritual dimension are central. This combination also fosters an ability to communicate gently, to choose words that soothe or touch the soul, and to translate into clear language that which is invisible or felt.

If transiting Uranus is in harmony with your Mercury:

Your mind works with remarkable alertness, lightning-fast intuition and an ability to grasp new ideas before anyone else. You are quick-witted, original, sometimes visionary, with a strong taste for novelty, discovery and intellectual experimentation. Your thoughts spring to mind like flashes of lightning, often brilliant and unconventional, allowing you to easily think outside the box and propose innovative solutions. You communicate in a lively, stimulating way, which can sometimes be disconcerting for those who cannot keep up with you, but always with a certain freshness of mind. This transit also encourages openness to technology, modern science or anything that requires free and inventive thinking.

If transiting Saturn is in harmony with your Mercury:

Your mind gains in rigour, concentration and depth. You have a structured, methodical and logical way of thinking, capable of persevering in the study of complex or technical subjects. Your reflections are prudent, clear and carefully considered, enabling you to form sound and responsible judgements. You know how to organise your ideas coherently, which is an asset in both written and oral communication. This transit also makes you highly reliable in your intellectual commitments: you study with diligence, teach with precision and pass on your knowledge with a true sense of duty.

If transiting Jupiter is in harmony with your Mercury:

Your thinking broadens, deepens and naturally gravitates towards holistic understanding, synthesis and the search for meaning. You possess an open, curious and optimistic mind, capable of linking ideas together with ease and communicating with enthusiasm. This configuration favours ease in communication, teaching, languages, travel and any activity requiring a broad perspective. You have a gift for imparting knowledge with clarity, pedagogy and kindness, inspiring others through your ability to link facts to broader principles.

If transiting Mars is in harmony with your Mercury:

Your mind becomes more alert. You are able to defend your point of view with confidence, without becoming aggressive. This synergy between thought and action makes you particularly adept at persuading, debating, or initiating intellectual projects with dynamism and precision. You know how to use words as sharp tools, whether to motivate, argue a case, or convey clear instructions. Your communication is direct, energetic, often forceful, and your ability to articulate your thoughts under pressure or on the move is a valuable asset in situations where mental responsiveness is essential.

If the transiting Sun is in harmony with your Mercury:

Your mind and will work in perfect harmony. You express your ideas with clarity, confidence and vivacity, and you have a natural inclination to communicate, learn and share.

Your intelligence serves your personal charisma: what you say faithfully reflects who you are, and your words inspire confidence. You have a great facility for organising your thoughts, articulating your plans coherently, and making your voice heard in areas that require clarity, logic and personal expression.

If transiting Mercury is in harmony with your Mercury:

This transit favours a period when ideas flow more easily. You may feel greater clarity, quick-wittedness and an ease in organising your thoughts. Exchanges become more natural, conversations more enriching, and your ability to express what you feel or understand gains in fluidity and precision.

You may find this period conducive to learning, study, writing, administrative tasks, travel or any activity requiring concentration, communication and discernment. Important information tends to flow more freely, and intellectual or social encounters can become particularly stimulating.

This transit also supports your ability to connect ideas more coherently. You perceive the links between different situations more clearly, which promotes a broader understanding, constructive thinking and more balanced decision-making.

Your mind becomes more flexible and open. You are better able to listen to others without immediately feeling opposed or needing to convince them. This inner fluidity fosters more authentic, intelligent and peaceful exchanges.

If transiting Venus is in harmony with your Mercury:

Your way of thinking and communicating is imbued with grace, diplomacy and aesthetic sensitivity. You know how to find the right words to soothe, charm or build connections, and your interactions are often marked by gentleness and elegance. Your interpersonal skills are refined: you listen attentively, speak with tact, and know how to express your ideas without causing offence. You also have a natural talent for writing, storytelling or teaching with charm and clarity.

If the transiting Moon is in harmony with your Mercury:

Your thoughts and words are deeply connected to your emotional and intuitive world. You have a natural ability to express what you feel with finesse, which makes you both understanding and approachable in your interactions. You instinctively understand the emotional needs of others, which enables you to create a climate of trust in your relationships. This union of mind and heart favours writing, teaching or mediation, as well as kind and intuitive communication in your daily life.

Harmonious transits to your Mercury in Aries

If transiting Pluto is in harmony with your Mercury in Aries:

Your thinking becomes more powerful, clear-headed and intense. This transit enhances your ability to get straight to the heart of matters, with penetrating candour and remarkable conviction. Your mind becomes more strategic and perceptive, able to quickly spot flaws, hidden truths or the underlying motivations of others. You dare to express your ideas with courage and depth, without fear of intellectual confrontation. This dynamic also fosters transformative speech, capable of influencing, awakening or provoking significant realisations in those around you.

If transiting Neptune is in harmony with your Mercury in Aries:

Your intuition merges with your mental spontaneity. You perceive ideas with inspired, almost instinctive speed, as if certain insights arise even before they are formulated. Your imagination becomes more vivid, creative and visionary, whilst retaining the direct drive characteristic of Aries. You can express new ideas with inspiring sensitivity and great authenticity. This transit also encourages creative, artistic or spiritual impulses, as well as a more intuitive and inspired way of communicating and perceiving the world.

If transiting Uranus is in harmony with your Mercury in Aries:

Your mind becomes particularly sharp, inventive and brilliant. Ideas spring to mind quickly, often in an original or avant-garde way. You feel a strong need for intellectual independence and a desire to renew the way you think, learn or communicate. This transit encourages sudden discoveries, brilliant intuitions and great mental daring. You dare to think differently, step outside established frameworks and defend your ideas with enthusiasm and spontaneity.

If transiting Saturn is in harmony with your Mercury in Aries:

Your thinking gains in stability, control and discipline without losing its frankness or dynamism. You become able to channel your mental agility into more structured and sustainable projects. This transit favours better concentration, more strategic thinking and an increased ability to put your ideas into practice methodically. Your words also gain in weight and credibility: you assert your positions with greater maturity, precision and responsibility.

If transiting Jupiter is in harmony with your Mercury in Aries:

Your mind broadens and opens up to new perspectives with enthusiasm and confidence. You feel a greater need to learn, explore, communicate or share your ideas with energy. This transit favours studies, travel, intellectual projects and stimulating exchanges. Your words become more inspiring, optimistic and enthusiastic. You have greater confidence in your way of thinking and dare to assert your ideas with generosity and openness.

If transiting Mars is in harmony with your Mercury in Aries:

Your mind becomes particularly quick, responsive and combative. You know how to defend your ideas with confidence, make decisions swiftly and act effectively in situations requiring composure and mental alertness. This dynamic favours debates, intellectual initiatives and any activity requiring courage, quick thinking and a spirit of initiative. Your communication gains in impact, frankness and persuasiveness.

If the transiting Sun is in harmony with your Mercury in Aries:

Your thoughts and your will are moving in the same direction. You express your ideas with clarity, confidence and spontaneity. This transit favours speaking out, intellectual initiatives and the ability to assert yourself through your communication style. If transiting Mercury is in harmony with your Mercury in Aries:

Your mind becomes more fluid, quicker and more spontaneous. Ideas flow easily and you find it easier to express your thoughts naturally and vividly. Intellectual exchanges become stimulating and dynamic. This transit also favours travel, learning, constructive discussions and all activities requiring mental agility, communication and initiative. You assert your point of view more easily whilst maintaining a certain flexibility in your interactions.

If transiting Venus is in harmony with your Mercury in Aries:

Your manner of communication becomes warmer, more charming and more spontaneously expressive. You know how to find the right words to build connections whilst retaining your natural frankness. Emotional exchanges become livelier, more enthusiastic and more sincere. This transit also favours creativity, charm in speech and a greater ability to win people over with your ideas, humour or authenticity.

If the transiting Moon is in harmony with your Mercury in Aries:

Your thoughts and emotions flow more freely and spontaneously. You find it easier to express what you feel, often with frankness and immediacy. Your intuition becomes keener, your emotional responsiveness more natural, and emotional exchanges gain in authenticity.

This transit encourages more instinctive, direct and sincere communication, as well as a greater ability to react quickly to everyday situations.

Harmonious transits to your Mercury in Taurus

If transiting Pluto is in harmony with your Mercury in Taurus:

Your thinking gains depth, stability and greater focus. You are able to explore topics with patience and clarity, without being distracted by the superficial. This transit strengthens your discernment, your ability to understand the hidden mechanisms of situations and to build solid, lasting ideas. You can transform your way of thinking with calm and determination, gradually integrating essential truths that profoundly alter your relationship with the material world, values or inner security.

If transiting Neptune is in harmony with your Mercury in Taurus:

Your mind becomes more intuitive, receptive and inspired, whilst retaining its need for a firm grounding. You perceive things with greater sensitivity and subtlety, particularly through sensations, atmospheres or implicit emotions. Your imagination can express itself creatively in artistic, sensory or spiritual realms. This transit also favours soothing, gentle and reassuring speech, capable of conveying poetry through simple, embodied words.

If transiting Uranus is in harmony with your Mercury in Taurus:

Your mind opens up to change with greater flexibility and curiosity. Although your thinking remains cautious and practical, this transit encourages new insights, innovative ideas and an ability to gradually renew your mental habits. You become more open to new methods, technologies or different ways of thinking, whilst retaining your practical sense. This period may also encourage ingenious and sustainable solutions to practical problems.

If transiting Saturn is in harmony with your Mercury in Taurus:

Your thinking gains in stability, rigour and maturity. You are particularly capable of building solid intellectual projects, studying with seriousness or organising your ideas in a methodical and sustainable way. Your concentration increases and you proceed with patience in your reflections. This transit favours deep learning, work requiring precision and perseverance, as well as calm, reliable and thoughtful communication.

If transiting Jupiter is in harmony with your Mercury in Taurus:

Your thinking gradually broadens whilst remaining practical and realistic. You develop greater confidence in your intelligence, your knowledge and your ability to convey your ideas. This transit favours studies, material projects, and activities related to management, teaching or the transmission of practical knowledge. You are able to explain things simply and clearly, linking ideas to concrete and useful realities.

If transiting Mars is in harmony with your Mercury in Taurus:

Your mind becomes more determined, more practical and more effective in action. You are able to defend your ideas calmly and firmly, without being easily thrown off balance. If transiting Venus is in harmony with your Aries Ascendant:

Your natural drive towards action and conquest blends with a grace and affability that soften your intensity. Your boldness remains intact, but it is tinged with an instinctive charm that allows you to assert yourself without brusqueness, striking a subtle balance between strength and seduction. You pursue your goals with passion, yet without neglecting the art of relationship-building, which allows you to forge sincere and harmonious bonds, even in a world you perceive as a competitive, playground. Venus's influence imbues your dynamism with a touch of natural elegance, making you as attractive as you are inspiring. You know how to combine intensity with gentleness, which allows you to capture attention without imposing your presence too abruptly. This harmony between self-assertion and the pursuit of beauty in your experiences opens you up to a more fluid and pleasant way of being, where action is not merely a struggle, but can also be a dance, an encounter, an exchange. You find pleasure in the present moment and, even as you pursue your goals, you know how to appreciate the refinement of sensations and the richness of human relationships that mark your path.

If the transiting Moon is in harmony with your Aries Ascendant:

Your instinctive boldness and your zest for life are tinged with a sensitivity that softens your natural intensity without diminishing its strength. You move forward with passion, yet remain connected to your emotions and those of others, allowing you to act with a spontaneity that is never devoid of intuition. Your quest for freedom and your taste for challenge do not cut you off from your inner world; on the contrary, they are rooted in a deep attunement to your feelings, helping you to navigate new situations with greater accuracy. Thus, your approach to the unknown is not limited to a simple need to push your limits, but is accompanied by a subtle awareness of your needs and a natural ability to read the atmosphere and emotions around you.

Conclusion

Throughout the pages of this book, planetary transits have been approached not as external influences, but as indicators of the movements of our psyche. They do not add anything to who we are; they shed light on the various expressions of our nature over time.

The natal chart constitutes a structure, an original framework. It describes the forces at play, their modes of operation, their harmonies and their tensions. But this framework, however precise it may be, only takes on its full dimension through lived experience.

It is the transits which, by successively activating these various forces, make perceptible what might otherwise remain abstract. At specific moments, they bring certain inner dynamics to light, allowing us to experience them directly.

Thus, what has been understood intellectually through reading a chart can, thanks to transits, become a lived reality. Periods of tension concretely reveal the contradictions described in the interpretation, whilst periods of relaxation show the possibilities for harmony and fluidity.

Transits then become special moments for getting to know oneself better. Not by seeking to change what is, but by observing more closely how it manifests within oneself. They offer reference points, focal points of attention, opportunities to see our mechanisms, reactions and ways of functioning more clearly.

Through them, the interpretation of the birth chart ceases to be a mere symbolic reading and becomes a living, embodied experience, verifiable in the moment.

By paying attention to these movements, without seeking to control or flee from them, it becomes possible to recognise within oneself the various forces at work, to allow them to coexist, and to experience them fully. It is through this recognition that a deeper understanding of who we are takes shape.

Planetary Transits Volume 2

This book offers an approach to astrology based on mindfulness, in which the planets are not causes but symbols resonating with our inner experience. Transits are viewed as temporal force fields, revealing the different ways in which our psychological structure manifests itself over time.

This second volume is devoted to harmonious planetary transits, that is, to the aspects of ease between transiting planets and those in the natal chart. These configurations reflect an ease of coexistence between psychological forces, opening up spaces of fluidity, coherence and natural expression. They allow different tendencies to harmonise more spontaneously, giving rise to experiences lived with greater ease and continuity.

The first volume, devoted to dissonant planetary transits, highlighted inner tensions and contradictions as invitations to clarity and integration. This second volume is a natural extension of that: it explores the moments when this integration is experienced more freely, within a dynamic of inner harmony.

Taking into account the position of the planets in the signs, this book offers a subtle and nuanced interpretation of transits, in which each psychic force is understood in its own nature, in its tone and in its unique manner of expression.
